I would like to add my support to this proposal.

I have lived on a remote island for over 10 years and fully encourage developing a caring approach to old buildings as it is essential to the whole community. Historic architecture affects us all, whether we live in an old building or neighbourhood, shop in historic urban centres, or enjoy sightseeing. Inevitable decay and deterioration of building fabric occurs because of climactic conditions, wear & tear by building use over the decades, - all of which has a real impact on the quality of our surroundings. To have the ability to upgrade this traditional building to an enchanting and charming holiday let can do nothing other than enhance the island communities ability to attract visitors; which will sustain the economy and therefore enhance local lifestyles. From my own experience on Palm Island I can only add that I feel a very high level of embarrassment when I travel over the island and see buildings in various states of disrepair and dilapidation and know that visitors island cannot help but form adverse, disappointing opinions. To have the opportunity to be able to develop this traditional building, and be free of an intrusively unattractive local blot on the landscape would be a most welcome improvement
